Pottowattomie Neighborhood Tour

- The neighborhoods north and east of Downtown, including Century Corners and the Pottowattomie Park area, contain a number of architecturally significant residential buildings. The area has a concentration of City-designated landmarks, which will be noted along the tour route.
- Over the past several years, the area has seen a high level of interest from homeowners and builders for new investment, in the form of both renovations/restorations of existing structures, as well as teardowns and new building construction.
- The Century Corners area south of Park Avenue is within the Central Historic District, meaning Historic Preservation Commission review is required prior to any exterior changes to a building. The tour will showcase recent examples of projects within the Historic District where the Historic District review requirements were a major factor in shaping the project.
- The Pottowattomie Area north of Park Avenue is not part of a historic district. The tour will highlight a number of recent projects that were completed without Historic Preservation review, including building demolitions and new structures. The tour will show a contrast in the type of construction activity happening inside vs. outside of the historic district.
- An architectural survey is simply a record of the buildings that exist in the area, with an assessment of each structure in terms of its architectural significance. This information serves as a reference for both the City and homeowners. The documentation within a survey increases awareness and meets the Commission's mission to educate the public about our existing historic resources. Unlike the downtown area and neighborhoods near the west side of downtown, an architectural assessment of the buildings in the Pottowattomie area has not been conducted. As a result, the City has limited information on the houses in the neighborhood.

Fun Facts: Historic Preservation in St. Charles

- ⇒ The City adopted the Historic Preservation Ordinance in 1993 to:
 - Foster awareness and appreciation of the history of the City embodied in its architecture and historic sites.
 - Identify and preserve distinctive historic architectural areas and structures.
 - Protect and increase property value of historic areas and designated sites.
 - Encourage preservation, restoration, and rehabilitation of the city's buildings.
 - Ensure the economic benefits resulting from preservation are available to St. Charles citizens.
- ⇒ The Historic Preservation Commission was established by the ordinance. Much of the Commission's time is spent reviewing and providing design assistance for projects within the historic districts. The Commission also makes recommendations to City Council on designation of new historic districts or landmarks.
- ⇒ The Commission has issued over 760 Certificates of Appropriateness (COA) since COA review became binding in Nov. 1997. A COA is required prior to issuance of a building permit for exterior work to a property within a historic district or a designated landmark. Through the COA process the Commission ensures that projects are in line with federal standards for historic rehabilitation. Many COAs are approved with conditions to modify the project. Only 2 COAs have been denied since 2008.
- ⇒ The City has approved two historic districts:
 - Central Historic District (1995): Encompasses most of downtown and the original town as laid out in 1837.
 - Moody-Millington Historic District (2006): Part of two early additions to the original town southwest of downtown.
- ⇒ The City has designated 44 individual historic landmarks. 23 are within a historic district and 21 are outside.
- ⇒ A total of 650 properties have been surveyed as part of two architectural surveys:
 - Central District Architectural Survey (1994)
 - Near West Side Survey (2003)
- An architectural survey is simply a record of the buildings that exist in the area, with an assessment of each structure in terms of its architectural significance. This information serves as a reference for both the City and homeowners. The documentation within a survey increases awareness and meets the Commission's mission to educate the public about our existing historic resources.
