Description – 720 Prairie Street

Built in 1930 by Bernard Snelting for his own family, this Colonial Revival (“A Field Guide to American Houses, pages 321-341”) is the westward expansion beyond Third Street (known as the Early Modern Era movement to the suburbs influenced by the automobile, Frank Lloyd Wright, and Le Corbusier, and sometimes called Carchitecture) in St Charles along the north side of Prairie Street. The Snelting family building business was an established company operating in and around St. Charles in the early 1900’s. With the advent of the 1929 financial market crash it was common for builders at that time to use their existing wood inventory for personal construction as demand for commercial construction had disappeared. The “Architectural Features” description used in the 1990’s STC survey can be applied to the home today. “The center gable is on axis with the front door that is covered by an open porch with a pediment centered below. The pediment is not elaborately detailed having only a niche where a fan detail might have been and a small acroterion at the peak. Two full height square columns support it. There is leaded glass in the windows of the center gable. The rest of the porch is supported at the corners with partial height square columns. The front elevation also features paired windows, which are sometimes seen in this style.” This is a contributing structure for architectural significance to the neighborhood. Original exterior features are chimney (brick), doors (wood), exterior walls (clapboard), foundation (concrete like block), trim (wood), and windows (wood).

The criteria used include a contributing, original material Colonial Revival and a fine representative of the Early Modern Era – automobile period.

Additionally, the following Criteria for Designation apply:

Property has character, interest, or value which is part of the development of the community - #1.

Structure embodies distinguishing characteristics of an architectural style valuable for the study of a period - #4.

Property has a unique location that makes it a familiar visual feature - #8.

Property is suitable for preservation or restoration - #10.

IDENTIFYING FEATURES

Accentuated front door, normally with decorative crown (pediment) supported by pilasters, or extended forward and supported by slender columns to form entry porch; doors commonly have overhead fanlights or sidelights; facade normally shows symmetrically balanced windows and center door (less commonly with door off-center); windows with double-hung sashes, usually with multi-pane glazing in one or both sashes; windows frequently in adjacent pairs.

PRINCIPAL SUBTYPES

Nine principal subtypes can be distinguished. Some examples may be almost identical to their colonial (particularly Georgian and Adam) prototypes. Clues for distinguishing Revival copies from early originals are given below under Variants and Details.

ASYMMETRICAL—About 10 percent of Colonial Revival houses have asymmetrical facades, a feature rarely seen on their colonial prototypes. These asymmetrical examples range from rambling, free-form houses resembling the free classic Queen Anne style (see pages 276-9) to simple boxes with asymmetrical window or porch arrangements. Prior to 1900 this subtype accounted for about one-third of all Colonial Revival houses. After 1910 few examples were constructed until the 1930s, when irregular facades reappeared with less elaborate detailing. These were, in part, inspired by the desire for attached garages, which were difficult to incorporate within a balanced facade.

HIPPED ROOF WITH FULL-WIDTH PORCH—About one-third of Colonial Revival houses built before about 1915 are of this subtype, which is sometimes called the Classic Box. These have a one-story, full-width porch with classical columns, which is added to a symmetrical, two-story house of square or rectangular plan. Two-story pilasters are common at the corners; dormers, hipped or gabled, are usually present. Doors may be centered or placed to the side. These houses have both Neoclassical and Colonial Revival influences, but lack the full-height porches of typical Neoclassical houses.

HIPPED ROOF WITHOUT FULL-WIDTH PORCH—About 25 percent of Colonial Revival houses are simple two-story rectangular blocks with hipped roofs; porches are usually absent or, if present, are merely small entry porches covering less than the full facade width. This subtype, built throughout the Colonial Revival era, predominates before about 1910. On early examples, the colonial detailing tended to be highly exaggerated and of awkward

Eclectic Houses: Colonial Revival

HIPPED ROOF WITH FULL-WIDTH PORCH

1. Galveston, Texas; ca. 1911. Lawrence House. On narrow urban lots a front-gabled roof occasionally replaces the more common hipped roof.

2. Dallas, Texas; ca. 1910. This early, two-ranked house with an off-center entrance is adapted from the simple four-square folk plan with a pyramidal roof.

3. Ashe County, North Carolina; ca. 1920. Livesy House. This example, like figures 5, 6, and 7, has a centered entrance and a three-ranked facade, indicating the likelihood of a central-hall plan rather than the simple four-square plan seen in figures 2 and 4.

4. Buffalo, New York; ca. 1900. Foster House. A simple, early two-ranked example; note the corner pilasters.

5. Union Springs, Alabama; ca. 1910. Note the elaborate pedimented entranceway moved to the front of the porch, rather than around the doorway as in Colonial examples. Less grand pediments are seen in figures 2 and 3.

6. Winston-Salem, North Carolina; ca. 1910. Note the grouped columns on pedestals. This pattern of porch supports was uncommon before about 1900.

7. Brooklyn, New York; 1900. John J. Petit, architect. Paired windows and a front door with sidelights, but no fanlight, are common Revival details seen clearly in this example.

8. Buffalo, New York; ca. 1900. White House. An unusually elaborate example with roof and upper porch balustrades, upper-story bay windows, and a heavily detailed cornice with a solid railing above.
