838 N. 5th Avenue – Description

“Saxony Terrace”, built near the end of 1913 for Charles and Lillie Schmidt, is a fine example of the Prairie Style Architecture (A Field Guide to American Houses – pages 438++) influenced by Frank Lloyd Wright and others. The current owners believe that August and Oscar Wilson (Chicago Tribune May 18, 2008) built this home. The Wilson Brothers worked with Wright and built as many as 100 structures throughout the valley during the first half of 1900 under their own Wilson name.

The home remains original both exterior and interior with any interior improvements keeping within the prairie style architecture. An interesting item is that the current ceramic tiles covering the roof which was added in 1926 still covers the original shake material when the home was constructed in 1913. Exterior brick, stucco, wood windows/doors/storms remain today. Carol and Gertrude Norris (parents of Lester) purchased the home from the Schmidt’s in 1924 however they did not live in this structure. However, Lester and Dellora did reside in this structure.

Today, Joyce Cregier (remember the Early Modern – auto driven growth of the city west of Third Street and south of Prairie Street in the 1920’s-30’s was the Cregier Addition is the current owner for 47 years. She has been an excellent caretaker for this site.

The criteria used is as follows:

- #1 Property has character, interest, or value which is part of the development of the community.
- #3 Property is identified with a person who significantly contributed to the development of the community.

8.)

#4 Structure embodies distinguishing characteristics of an architectural style valuable for the study of a period, type, or use of indigenous materials.

#5 Property is identified with the work of a master builder, designer whose work has influenced the development of the area, the county, the state, and the nation.

#7 Structure embodies design elements that make it structurally or architecturally innovative.

IDENTIFYING FEATURES

Low-pitched roof, usually hipped, with widely overhanging eaves; two stories, with one-story wings or porches; eaves, cornices, and facade detailing emphasizing horizontal lines; often with massive, square porch supports.

PRINCIPAL SUBTYPES

Four principal subtypes can be distinguished:

HIPPED ROOF, SYMMETRICAL, WITH FRONT ENTRY—This subtype, which is sometimes called the Prairie Box or American Foursquare, has a simple square or rectangular plan, low-pitched hipped roof, and symmetrical facade. One-story wings, porches, or carports are clearly subordinate to the principal two-story mass. The entrance, which may be centered or off-center, is a conspicuous focal point of the facade. This was the earliest Prairie form and developed into the most common vernacular version. In vernacular examples, hipped dormers are common, as are full-width, single-story front porches and double-hung sash windows. Many show Mission or Italian Renaissance secondary details, such as tiled roofs or cornice-line brackets.

HIPPED ROOF, SYMMETRICAL, NO FRONT ENTRY—Similar to the type just described but with inconspicuous entrances and facades dominated by horizontal rows of casement windows having sharply defined vertical detailing. This is a favorite form for smaller, architect-designed Prairie houses and also for those built on narrow urban lots.

HIPPED ROOF, ASYMMETRICAL—Most high-style examples are of this form. Typically a single two- or three-story, hipped-roof mass is contrasted with equally dominant, but lower, wings, porches, or carports with hipped roofs. The front entrance is usually inconspicuous, the facade being dominated by horizontal rows of casement windows having sharply defined vertical detailing. Many variations occur, but in all cases the facade is asymmetrical; most have masonry walls.

GABLED ROOF—In this subtype, gables replace the more typical hipped roofs. High-style examples typically have both front-facing and side gables, each with exaggerated eave overhangs. In some, the gables have swept-back profiles with the peaks projecting beyond the lower edges. The pitch of the roof edges may also be flattened to give a pagoda-like effect. Vernacular examples usually have simple front- or side-gabled roofs. Tudor secondary influences are common, particularly false half-timbering in gables.

Built to Last

By Annemarie Mannion and TRIBUNE REPORTER
Chicago Tribune

Published: May 18, 2008 at 12:00 am

August and Oscar Wilson -- not Owen and Luke -- are names with cachet in west suburban Geneva.

Unlike the Wilson Brothers of film fame, the duo from Geneva merely built houses and commercial structures in the first half of the 20th Century that are still lauded for their quality today.

Living in a house that the brothers built is a point of pride in this city where approximately 70 of the structures still stand.

The Wilson Brothers built about 100 structures overall, some as far away as Wisconsin (where they built a creamery), according to Liz Safanda, director of Preservation Partners of the Fox Valley.

"People are still proud to say they live in a Wilson Brothers house," said David Oberg, director of the Geneva History Center.

Ask Betty Watanabe and her husband, Peter Barickman. Two years ago, they moved into a house built by Oscar Wilson for himself, his wife and six children in 1912.

Watanabe calls it "a Bungalloyd," showing the Wilsons' heavy influence by architect Frank Lloyd Wright. "It's done in the Arts and Crafts style."

She points to its charms -- ornate wood trim and a first-floor room with a concrete floor dubbed the "canary room" because Wilson kept the colorful birds.

Wide eaves, long and narrow windows, interior wood trim and glass bookcases common to Wilson houses further show the influence of Wright.

Another element borrowed from Wright, an internal gutter system, has not met Watanabe's fancy.

"The internal gutters are famous for not working well and leaking," she said.

That quirk aside, the Wilsons "have a reputation for being great builders," said Safanda.

18)

The Wilsons were immigrants from Sweden. August, the elder of the two, came in 1893 to Chicago to work in the Swedish Pavilion at the World's Columbian Exposition. Oscar followed six years later and joined August in the building business in 1903.

According to the Geneva history center, the Wilsons worked for approximately 40 years and built many of Geneva's older buildings including many Craftsman-style bungalows, Foursquare and Colonial-style homes, as well as larger houses on the south side.

Two of the brothers' homes were designed by Wright: the Hoyt House on Fifth Street in Geneva and the Gridley-Snow house on Batavia Avenue in Batavia. The Wilsons also built the Avery Coonley House in Riverside (this sentence as published has been corrected in this text).

In a house so built to last "every piece of woodwork has been redone," Watanabe said, pointing to the Douglas fir floor boards that you just don't find in contemporary construction.

"They go the length of the room. You just don't see them anymore. And the attention to detail, you don't see that anymore," she said.

The family also has replaced those Wright-inspired leaky gutters, gutted a bathroom to make it part of a master suite and added another bathroom.

"We stumbled into it," said Watanabe of the finding the house after living in a contemporary home in a golf-course community.

"It's been an expensive experience and an interesting lifestyle change. We call ourselves urban suburbanites."

And just as Oscar Wilson did, they call the room where he kept his birds the "canary room," which is still complete with a bird cage.

"We're trying to be good stewards and take care of the house so it will be here another 100 years," Watanabe said.

The Wright way

The Wilson Brothers built these structures for architect Frank Lloyd Wright:

Hoyt House: 1906, Prairie-style at 318 S. Fifth St. in Geneva

Joshel House: 1916, Brick Foursquare with Prairie influences at 127 S. Second St. in Geneva 19.

Avery Coonley House: 1907-08, Prairie-style at 281 Bloomingbank Rd. in Riverside
Riverbank: 1907, Farmhouse at 1511 Batavia St. in Geneva

OTHER WILSON STRUCTURES INCLUDE:

August Wilson House: 1907, Foursquare style at 202 N. Fourth St. in Geneva

Henry Bond Fargo House: 1898-1900, Mission style at 316 Elizabeth Pl. in Geneva
